Episode Twelve

THE hermit tells Elaine that Bruce is dead. She nearly collapses. Just after the hermit tells Elaine that Bruce has been killed, Bruce walks in upon them. The hermit laughs when Elaine questions him, saying that he must have his little joke. He finally tells them that a ship may pass that way soon, but to signal it Bruce would have to swim to a far-off point and make a fire. Elaine and Bruce consider this.

In a seacoast city Hunch Henderson comes across the real Vera Vernon. Talking with her, he finds out who she is and for the first time realizes the real appearance of Elaine Emerson. He tries to get Vera to join him again; but she tells him that she is happily married and has turned over a new leaf.

Elaine and Bruce part again with much misgiving. Bruce swims to the point, while Elaine tries to pass the long hours by feeding her friend, the elephant. Bruce is best by sharks and reaches the point only after a desperate battle with them. He lights the signal fire. That evening Elaine, looking over the sea, discovers the fire and knows that Bruce arrived safely. She hopes and prays that he will return as well. Unwilling to face again the menace of the sharks, Bruce starts back along the shore line. He is captured by another band of savages.
